Medical Paramedic Antonio (Tony) Falletta has been with Victoria Gold at the Eagle Gold Mine for one year; following a 30-year career with BC Emergency Health Services (BCEHS); providing health and wellness and emergency medical support for employees and contractors on site. His role involves keeping current with new medical updates and procedures, while maintaining high function and professional conduct.

“Interacting with the employees and contractors at the Eagle Gold Mine and caring for those who need it most during difficult times is very rewarding,” says Tony. “I also enjoy working with the many Indigenous citizens here at site and learning about their rich culture and heritage. It gives me an understanding of how diverse the Yukon is.”

Jarritt Yates, Victoria Gold’s Emergency Response Coordinator, started at the mine in May. He is responsible for the general health and safety of all working on site, with a specific responsibility in fire code enforcement. “My position offers the opportunity to work within all departments at the Eagle Gold Mine,” says Jarritt. “My favourite thing about my job is training the Emergency Response Team (ERT) on Sundays and watching the team’s knowledge and effectiveness grow as we train together.”

Blaster Kayla Rushton enjoys how physically active her role is paired with its need for critical thinking and the unique perspective of the mining industry her job affords her. “I enjoy working in remote locations and am excited to work for Victoria Gold,” says Kayla, who started at the Eagle Gold Mine in May. “With my partner in the Drill-Blast Department, we work as a team to provide safe and efficient blasts at the mine.”

Greg Thorsteinson has been with Victoria Gold at the mine since September as a Mobile Maintenance Planner. One aspect of his role involves coordinating maintenance with other departments. “I really enjoy being involved in the process and making things better for the team,” says Greg. “And, working in the Yukon is beautiful and the people here are amazing.”

Yukoner Ryan Faulds is a Buyer for Victoria Gold, ensuring collaboration among both internal and external groups for the timely and effective procurement of goods and services for the Eagle Gold Mine. “I really enjoy contributing to operations and working with such a highly-motivated, diverse and experienced mine and maintenance operations team,” says Ryan. “I really appreciate learning from the experience of my co-workers on a daily basis.”
